Cyberbullying is bullying through the use of technology. This mostly occurs through the Internet, social media and mobile phones. The question is, is this form of bullying worse than physical bullying?

Cyberbullying is worse than physical bullying because it is a permanent attack. Any words, images or bullying listed over the Internet is seen globally and becomes a permanent digital footprint. This means that once these words, images or bullying is online it can’t be erased.

Cyberbullying is worse than physical bullying because anyone can do it. The problem is that anyone with access to the Internet has a platform where they can participate in cyberbullying. Another problem with this is that the person participating in cyberbullying doesn’t even need to be near them. The victim can’t even hide.

On the other hand, there are arguments to suggest that physical bullying is worse than cyberbullying. One argument is that physical bullying can cause physical injuries. There can be broken bones, which may require many costly hospital visits.

Physical bullying is worse than cyberbullying because it can affect your life. This type of bullying can result in an inability to participate in any sporting and/or other commitments. This might also mean that you could stop wanting to do things that you would normally do.

In conclusion there are many arguments to suggest which is worse: cyberbullying or physical bullying. Cyberbullying is a permanent attack that can be done by anyone. Whereas physical bullying can affect your life and stop you participating in your everyday life. What do you think?
